Civil Action No. 4:22-cv-00691-O

Signed November 3, 2022

Synopsis

Background: Firearms owners, gunsmithing shop, and advocacy organization brought action alleging that Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) final rule amending its definition of "frame or receiver" exceeded its authority under Gun Control Act. After the District Court, Reed O'Connor, J., granted plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction, 2022 WL 4009048, and granted in part and denied in part plaintiffs' motion to expand injunction, 2022 WL 4809376, gun retailer intervened and filed motion for preliminary injunction.

Holdings: The District Court, Reed O'Connor, J., held that:

- 1 gun retailer demonstrated likelihood of success on merits of claims;
- 2 gun retailer sufficiently alleged likelihood of irreparable harm in absence of preliminary injunction; and
- 3 balance of hardships and public interest supported grant of gun retailer's motion for preliminary injunction.

Motion granted.

West Headnotes (16)Change View1 Injunction Authority and discretion of court

Decision to extend interlocutory relief is committed to district court's sound discretion.

2 Injunction Grounds in general; multiple factors

To establish entitlement to preliminary injunction, plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) substantial likelihood of success on merits; (2) substantial threat of irreparable harm; (3) that balance of hardships weighs in its favor; and (4) that issuance of preliminary injunction will not disserve public interest.

3 Injunction Scope of Relief in General

Scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

4 Injunction Specificity, vagueness, overbreadth, and narrowly-tailored relief

Because it is an extraordinary remedy, an injunction should be no more burdensome to the defendant than necessary to provide complete relief to the plaintiffs.

1 Case that cites this headnote

5 Injunction Specificity, vagueness, overbreadth, and narrowly-tailored relief

Injunction must redress the plaintiff's particular injury, and no more.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

6 Injunction Presumptions and burden of proof

As movant, the party seeking relief bears the burden of proving all four elements of the preliminary injunction.

7 Injunction Likelihood of success on merits*Injunction Prima facie showing

To show a likelihood of success on the merits, for purposes of determining whether to issue a preliminary injunction, plaintiff must present a prima facie case, but need not prove that he is entitled to summary judgment.

8 Injunction Weapons and explosives

Gun retailer demonstrated likelihood of success on merits of claim that Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF) final rule including weapon kits in its definition of "firearm" exceeded its authority under Gun Control Act (GCA), supporting grant of preliminary injunction to prohibit implementation or enforcement of rule; rule purported to regulate firearm parts which was contrary to plain language of GCA, and expanded definition of "frame or receiver" to include partially manufactured, non-functional receivers within "firearms" was contrary to GCA's statutory definition and was facially unlawful. 27 C.F.R. §§ 478.11, 478.12\(c\).

9 Injunction Irreparable injury*Injunction Injury to or restraint of trade or business in general

Showing of economic loss is usually insufficient to establish irreparable harm, as required to obtain a preliminary injunction, because damages may be recoverable at the conclusion of litigation; however, an exception exists where the potential economic loss is so great as to threaten the existence of the movant's business.

10 Injunction Injunctions against government entities in general

Where costs are nonrecoverable because the government-defendant enjoys sovereign immunity from monetary damages, irreparable harm, as required to obtain a preliminary injunction, is generally satisfied.

11 Injunction  Irreparable injury

Irreparable harm, as required to obtain a preliminary injunction, must be concrete and not merely de minimis.

12 Injunction  Weapons and explosives

Gun retailer sufficiently alleged likelihood of irreparable harm in absence of preliminary injunction seeking to prohibit implementation or enforcement of federal rule that purported to regulate partially manufactured firearm parts and weapon parts kits; retailer would have substantial decrease in sales following enactment of rule due to widespread customer concern about purchasing its products, and retailer's compliance costs would entail overhaul of its entire online, direct-to-customer business model, in addition to costs incurred through administrative compliance. 27 C.F.R. §§ 478.11, 478.12\(c\).

13 Injunction  Other particular cases

Gun retailer's purported five month and 11 day delay in seeking preliminary injunctive relief to prohibit implementation or enforcement of federal rule regulating partially manufactured firearm parts and weapon parts kits did not constitute delay sufficient to overcome retailer's demonstration of irreparable harm and bar injunctive relief; though not a plaintiff in original lawsuit, retailer participated in original lawsuit by filing declaration in support of original plaintiffs' motion for preliminary injunction 15 days after rule took effect and within a month after original plaintiffs' complaint, retailer's interests were quasi-represented via membership in advocacy organization that was original plaintiff and sought injunctive relief on behalf of members, and retailer filed motion to intervene simultaneously with motion for injunction. 27 C.F.R. §§ 478.11, 478.12\(c\).

14 Injunction  Injunctions Sought by Government in General*Injunction  Injunctions against government entities in general

The final two elements necessary to support a grant of injunctive relief, the balance of equities, the difference in harm to the respective parties, and the public interest, merge when the government is a party; in this assessment, the court weighs the competing claims of injury and considers the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief, while also considering the public consequences of granting injunctive relief.

15 Injunction  Weapons and explosives

Balance of hardships and public interest supported grant of gun retailer's motion for preliminary injunction seeking to prohibit implementation or enforcement of federal rule that purported to regulate partially manufactured firearm parts and weapon parts kits; any injury to government's interest in law enforcement and public safety was undermined by court's preliminary determination that rule was likely unlawful, retailer's liberty interest in purchase and sale of now-regulated gun parts outweighed government's interest in preventing prohibited persons from unlawfully possessing firearms, and government's alleged harm to public interest in preventing prohibited persons from obtaining firearms was mitigated by injunction's narrow tailoring. 27 C.F.R. §§ 478.11, 478.12\(c\).

16 Injunction  Administrative Agencies and Proceedings in General

For purposes of determining propriety of issuing preliminary injunction to enjoin agency action, there is generally no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful agency action; to the contrary, there is a substantial public interest in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws that govern their existence and operations.

OPINION & ORDER ON BLACKHAWK MANUFACTURING GROUP INC. d/b/a 80 PERCENT ARMS' PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION

Reed O'Connor, UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

*725 Before the Court are Intervenor-Plaintiff BlackHawk Manufacturing Group Inc. d/b/a 80 Percent Arms' Motion for Preliminary Injunction (Pl.'s Mot., ECF No. 102) and Brief in Support (Pl.'s Br. in Supp., ECF No. 103), both filed October 20, 2022; Defendants' Brief in Opposition to BlackHawk Manufacturing Group Inc. d/b/a 80 Percent Arms' Motion for Preliminary Injunction (Defs.' Resp., ECF No. 109), filed October 28, 2022; and BlackHawk Manufacturing *726 Group Inc. d/b/a 80 Percent Arms' Reply in Support of Motion for Preliminary Injunction (Pl.'s Reply, ECF No. 112), filed October 31, 2022. Having considered the parties' briefing, the Court GRANTS Intervenor-Plaintiff's motion.

I. BACKGROUND

The United States Congress has delegated the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives ("ATF") authority to regulate firearms in interstate commerce under the Gun Control Act of 1986. On April 26, 2022, ATF promulgated a Final Rule that purports to regulate partially manufactured firearm parts and weapon parts kits.¹ The Rule took effect on August 24, 2022.² Prior to its taking effect, on August 11, 2022, Plaintiffs brought this suit to challenge the legality of the Final Rule and claim, among other things, that the regulation exceeds the statutory authority that Congress vested in ATF.³ Original Plaintiffs include Texas residents and firearm owners Jennifer VanDerStok and Michael G. Andren ("Individual Plaintiffs"); Firearms Policy Coalition, Inc. ("FPC"), a nonprofit organization, comprised of individuals and entities nationwide, that exists to promote Second Amendment rights through legislative and legal advocacy;⁴ and Tactical Machining, LLC ("Tactical" or "Tactical Machining"), which manufactures and sells the products subject to the regulations at issue in this dispute.⁵ Within a week of filing their complaint, on October 17, 2022, Plaintiffs moved for a preliminary injunction seeking to broadly enjoin the Government from enforcing its Final Rule.⁶

On September 2, 2022, the Court issued its First Opinion in which it found that provisions of ATF's Final Rule—specifically, 27 C.F.R. §§ 478.11, 478.12(c)—likely exceed the scope of ATF's authority under the Gun Control Act ("GCA").⁷ Having made this preliminary finding, the Court enjoined Defendants, including the Attorney General, Department of Justice, ATF, and the ATF Director, along with their officers, agents, servants, and employees, from implementing or enforcing the rule against only Tactical Machining but otherwise denying injunctive relief to the remaining Plaintiffs.⁸ In its Second Opinion on the proper scope of the preliminary injunction, issued October 1, 2022, the Court extended the injunction to the Individual Plaintiffs and—for the purpose of providing Tactical Machining complete relief—to Tactical's customers.⁹

Intervenor-Plaintiff BlackHawk Manufacturing Group Inc. d/b/a 80 Percent Arms ("BlackHawk")—a manufacturer and retailer who sells products subject to ATF's Final Rule—was permitted to intervene in the suit under the Court's Order, issued October 18,

2022,¹⁰ and now seeks *727 its own protective preliminary injunction.¹¹ BlackHawk initially participated in the lawsuit peripherally by filing a declaration in support of Plaintiffs' original motion for preliminary injunction and moved to intervene a week before this Court, in its Second Opinion, again denied injunctive relief to Plaintiff-FPC's association members—of which BlackHawk is one.¹²

BlackHawk seeks a preliminary injunction that mirrors the relief currently afforded to Tactical Machining.¹³ BlackHawk's request for injunctive relief rests on its claims that the Final Rule was issued in excess of ATF's statutory authority, is facially unlawful, and unlawfully purports to regulate weapon parts kits as firearms contrary to the strictures of the GCA.¹⁴ In response, the Government primarily contends that BlackHawk has not substantiated the irreparable harm it will suffer absent injunctive relief, particularly in light of its "months-long delay" in seeking preliminary relief.¹⁵ The parties have briefed the issue and the motion is ripe for review.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

1 2 The decision to extend interlocutory relief is committed to the district court's sound discretion. See Miss. Power & Light Co. v. United Gas Pipe Line, 760 F.2d 618, 621 (5th Cir. 1985). To establish entitlement to a preliminary injunction, BlackHawk must demonstrate: (1) a substantial likelihood of success on the merits; (2) a substantial threat of irreparable harm; (3) that the balance of hardships weighs in its favor; and (4) that the issuance of the preliminary injunction will not disserve the public interest. Daniels Health Servs., L.L.C. v. Vascular Health Scis., L.L.C., 710 F.3d 579, 582 (5th Cir. 2013). The last two factors merge when the government is the opposing party. Nken v. Holder, 556 U.S. 418, 435, 129 S.Ct. 1749, 173 L.Ed.2d 550 (2009).

3 4 5 6 Once it has determined that a party is entitled to injunctive relief, a court must make a separate determination regarding the appropriate scope of that prospective injunction. "[T]he scope of injunctive relief is dictated by the extent of the violation established[.]" Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702, 99 S.Ct. 2545, 61 L.Ed.2d 176 (1979). In other words, because it is an extraordinary remedy, an injunction "should be no more burdensome to the defendant than necessary to provide complete relief to the plaintiffs." Madsen v. Women's Health Ctr., Inc., 512 U.S. 753, 756, 114 S.Ct. 2516, 129 L.Ed.2d 593 (1994) (cleaned up). Thus, an injunction must "redress the plaintiff's particular injury," and no more. Gill v. Whitford, — U.S. —, 138 S. Ct. 1916, 1934, 201 L.Ed.2d 313 (2018) (citation omitted). As movant, the party seeking relief bears the burden of proving all four elements of the preliminary injunction. Nichols v. Alcatel USA, Inc., 532 F.3d 364, 372 (5th Cir. 2008); Miss. Power & Light Co., 760 F.2d at 621.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Plaintiff is Likely to Succeed on the Merits

7 BlackHawk must first show a substantial likelihood that it will succeed on the merits of its claims. Daniels Health Servs., 710 F.3d at 582. "To show a likelihood of success, the plaintiff must present *728 a prima facie case, but need not prove that he is entitled to summary judgment." Id. As BlackHawk correctly points out, this Court has already preliminarily determined that the original Plaintiffs' statutory interpretation claims are likely to prevail on the merits.¹⁶ BlackHawk raises nearly identical interpretive claims (that the Final Rule was issued in excess of ATF's statutory authority under the APA; is facially unlawful; and contravenes the GCA's clear statutory prescriptions) in its complaint.¹⁷

8 Rather than recite its previous analysis with respect to the interpretive claims verbatim, the Court incorporates by reference the reasoning in its First Opinion.¹⁸ To summarize: the Final Rule purports to regulate firearm parts—including incomplete, non-functional receivers and weapon parts kits—contrary to the plain language of the GCA, which confined ATF's authority to regulation of "firearms," a term clearly defined by the statute.¹⁹ Moreover, the Final Rule's expanded definition of "frame or receiver" to include partially manufactured, non-functional receivers within the meaning of "firearms"—contrary to the GCA's clear statutory definition—is facially unlawful.²⁰ Because BlackHawk challenges the Final Rule on these grounds, the Court similarly finds that BlackHawk has shown a substantial likelihood of success on the merits of its claims.

B. Plaintiff Will Suffer Irreparable Harm Absent Injunctive Relief

9 10 11 In the Fifth Circuit, a harm is considered “irreparable only if it cannot be undone through monetary remedies.” Dennis Melancon, Inc. v. City of New Orleans, 703 F.3d 262, 279 (5th Cir. 2012) (quoting Interox Am. v. PPG Indus., Inc., 736 F.2d 194, 202 (5th Cir. 1984)). A showing of economic loss is usually insufficient to establish irreparable harm because damages may be recoverable at the conclusion of litigation. Janvey v. Alguire, 647 F.3d 585, 600 (5th Cir. 2011). However, “an exception exists where the potential economic loss is so great as to threaten the existence of the movant’s business.” Atwood Turnkey Drilling, Inc. v. Petroleo Brasileiro, S.A., 875 F.2d 1174, 1179 (5th Cir. 1989). And where costs are nonrecoverable because the government-defendant enjoys sovereign immunity from monetary damages, as is the case here, irreparable harm is generally satisfied. See Wages & White Lion Invs., L.L.C. v. FDA, 16 F.4th 1130, 1142 (5th Cir. 2021). Irreparable harm must also be concrete and not merely de minimis. Daniels Health Servs., L.L.C., 710 F.3d at 585; Dennis Melancon, Inc., 703 F.3d at 279 (cleaned up).

12 The Court has already decided this issue with respect to BlackHawk. When analyzing associational standing in its Second Opinion on the proper scope of the preliminary injunction, the Court found that:

Plaintiffs have indeed shown that at least one of FPC’s members, BlackHawk Manufacturing Group, Inc., d/b/a 80 Percent Arms, faces a substantial threat of irreparable harm Plaintiffs discuss BlackHawk’s alleged injuries at length, describing the manufacturer-retailer’s substantial decrease in sales following enactment of the Final *729 Rule due to widespread customer concern about purchasing its products [].²¹

In response, the Government claims BlackHawk could avert this injury by simply complying with the Rule.²² But “it is no answer to say that [Plaintiff] may avoid the harm by complying with an [] agency rule” that is likely unlawful.²³ And as this Court has previously held, “Defendants’ argument relies on the incorrect legal premise that compliance costs are not an irreparable harm.”²⁴ To this, the Government counters that any nonrecoverable compliance costs are de minimis, and therefore not cognizable.²⁵ The Government suggests this Court agrees by claiming it “has since found that FFLs can make sales to out-of-state purchasers through a local FFL with costs that are, at most, de minimis.²⁶ But that misreads the Court’s prior Opinion, wherein the Court found that Individual Plaintiffs’ compliance costs—incurred in the form of a one-time $30 FFL transfer fee—were de minimis.²⁷ The Court said nothing regarding the manufacturer’s (there, Tactical Machining’s) compliance costs being de minimis. Indeed, BlackHawk’s burden of complying with the Final Rule’s requirements would entail an overhaul of its entire online, direct-to-customer business model, in addition to the costs incurred through administrative compliance and other FFL-related fees.²⁸

13 The Government also focuses on BlackHawk’s “unexcused delay” in seeking preliminary injunctive relief—a fact it claims “weighs heavily against [BlackHawk’s] assertion that it would suffer irreparable harm without such relief.”²⁹ The Government calculates this purported delay from the date the Final Rule was announced to the date that BlackHawk moved for its preliminary injunction: a period of five months and eleven days.³⁰ But the Government’s timeline by which it measures the supposed delay is exaggerated. Though not as a named-Plaintiff, BlackHawk initially participated in this lawsuit when it filed a declaration in support of the Plaintiffs’ motion for preliminary injunction on September 8, 2022, only fifteen days after the Final Rule took effect and within a month of Plaintiffs’ initial complaint. Moreover, BlackHawk’s interests were quasi-represented in the case via its membership status in FPC, who was seeking injunctive relief on behalf of all its association members. Within two weeks of its initial involvement in the ongoing proceedings, BlackHawk moved to intervene and simultaneously filed a proposed motion for preliminary injunction. In the Court’s view, these efforts to vindicate its interests are far from an undue delay sufficient to *730 overcome BlackHawk’s clear demonstration of irreparable harm and bar injunctive relief.

Even if BlackHawk had effectively “[sat] on its rights”³¹ for five months, that length of time alone is not dispositive given that any determination of a movant’s timeliness seems to turn on the facts of the particular case. See, e.g., ADT, LLC v. Cap. Connect, Inc., 145 F. Supp. 3d 671, 699 (N.D. Tex. 2015) (finding an eight-month delay reasonable); Wireless Agents, L.L.C. v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 2006 WL 1540587, 3 (N.D. Tex. June 6, 2006) (finding a year’s delay unreasonable). For these reasons, the Court finds that BlackHawk has adequately demonstrated it will suffer irreparable harm absent injunctive relief.

C. The Balance of Equities and Public Interest Weigh in Plaintiff’s Favor

14 The final two elements necessary to support a grant of injunctive relief—the balance of equities (the difference in harm to the respective parties) and the public interest—“merge” when the government is a party. Nken, 556 U.S. at 435, 129 S.Ct. 1749. In this assessment, the Court weighs “the competing claims of injury and [] consider[s] the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief,” while also considering the public consequences of granting injunctive relief. Winter v. Natural Resources Defense Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S.Ct. 365, 172 L.Ed.2d 249 (2008) (internal citations omitted).

15 BlackHawk argues that its threatened injury (complete elimination of its business) and the public’s interest in lawful government action far outweighs any potential harm the government would incur in being temporarily prevented from enforcing its unlawful Rule.³² On the other hand, Defendants assert injuries to their interests in law enforcement and public safety, which they argue cannot be vindicated if BlackHawk is given interim injunctive relief.³³ This will result, they say, because without compliance with the Final Rule, “no safeguard at the point of purchase would prevent the sale to prohibited persons of products that can readily be converted into functional firearms,” and BlackHawk’s sale of noncompliant products “would render it far less likely that law enforcement would be able to trace the firearms in the event they were used to commit a crime.”³⁴ In other words, once those injuries occur, they cannot be remediated.

As with its analysis of likely success on the merits, the Court’s prior reasoning with respect to the balance of equities and competing public interests applies to BlackHawk’s motion for injunctive relief. In its First Opinion, this Court found that any injury to the Government’s general interest in law enforcement and public safety is appreciably undermined by this Court’s preliminary determination that the Final Rule is likely unlawful.³⁵ Moreover, it found that Plaintiffs’ liberty interest—as law-abiding citizens who wish to engage in historically lawful conduct (the purchase and sale of now-regulated parts)—outweighs the Government’s remaining interest in preventing prohibited persons from unlawfully possessing firearms.³⁶ That reasoning applies with equal force here and is strengthened by the fact that the Government’s *731 likely ultra vires enforcement efforts upset more than fifty years of ATF regulatory precedent against a public that has relied on that historic posture.³⁷

16 And even if it is true that, during the interim litigation, the non-enforcement of point-of-sale safeguards and record-keeping requirements against BlackHawk may undermine the public interest in law enforcement and public safety—a status quo that has persisted for decades—that purported injury does not outweigh the existential harm threatening BlackHawk’s continued operation. Nor does it outweigh the harm to the public’s interest in a government that abides by its own statutory and constitutional obligations. Indeed, “[t]here is generally no public interest in the perpetuation of unlawful agency action. To the contrary, there is a substantial public interest in having governmental agencies abide by the federal laws that govern their existence and operations.” League of Women Voters of United States v. Newby, 838 F.3d 1, 12 (D.C. Cir. 2016) (cleaned up). Just as the Government has an interest in the law’s enforcement, so too does the public have an equally compelling interest in enforcement of the laws that govern its governing authorities.

Finally, while the Government argues that “BlackHawk affirmatively seeks to protect the ability of potentially dangerous individuals such as felons, unlawful drug users, and domestic abusers to obtain items and kits that can readily be converted into functional firearms,” BlackHawk makes no such request.³⁸ Indeed, no less than three times, BlackHawk reiterates that it seeks “injunctive relief that matches the relief currently provided to Tactical.”³⁹ When BlackHawk moved for an injunction, the Court’s protective relief included Tactical and its customers but explicitly excepted any customers prohibited from possessing firearms under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g).⁴⁰ Thus, the Government's alleged harm to the public interest in preventing prohibited persons from obtaining firearms (by purchasing parts) is mitigated by the injunction's narrow tailoring. The Court therefore finds that the balance of hardships and the public interest weigh in favor of granting BlackHawk's request for injunctive relief.

* * * *

Having considered the arguments, evidence, and law, the Court determines that the relevant factors weigh in favor of granting a preliminary injunction. As BlackHawk requests and the Government concedes,⁴¹ the proper scope of relief is that which mirrors the relief currently afforded to Tactical Machining, LLC.⁴² Thus, any protective relief provided to BlackHawk must be sufficient to redress its injuries, without being overly inclusive. As this Court has previously found, BlackHawk's injuries cannot be remedied if its only source of revenue—customer willingness to transact business—has been severely curtailed. Thus, the Court finds that *732 the proper remedy is an injunction that applies to the company itself and to its customers.

IV. CONCLUSION

BlackHawk has shown it is entitled to a preliminary injunction against Defendants' enforcement of the Final Rule. Accordingly, the Court GRANTS the motion and ORDERS that Defendants and their officers, agents, servants, and employees are enjoined from implementing and enforcing against BlackHawk Manufacturing Group Inc. d/b/a 80 Percent Arms the provisions in 27 C.F.R. §§ 478.11 and 478.12 that the Court has preliminarily determined are unlawful. Reflecting the scope of relief currently afforded to Tactical Machining, LLC, the injunction also covers BlackHawk's customers (except for those individuals prohibited from possessing firearms under 18 U.S.C. § 922(g)). The Court waives the security requirement of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(c). See Kaepa, Inc. v. Achilles Corp., 76 F.3d 624, 628 (5th Cir. 1996).
